PECP creates a dialogue among different parts of the person centered/experiential therapy tradition, supporting, informing, and challenging academics and practitioners with the aim of the development of these approaches in a broad professional, scientific and political context. Thus, the mission of the journal is to encourage and disseminate worldwide, new work on person-centered and experiential therapies, including philosophy, theory, practice, training and research. The journal does not give preference to any parts of the world, nor to any philosophical or theoretical emphases within the approach, but instead seeks to increase awareness and appreciation of the full range of contributions.

PCEP also serves the general professional psychotherapy community by bringing leading-edge work to all academics and practitioners regardless of theoretical orientation. It will be of particular relevance to integrative therapists wishing to keep abreast of developments in the client-centered and experiential fields.

The four Co-editors and a distinguished Editorial Board maintain the standards of the Journal. Together, Co-editors and Board are responsible for refereeing articles and advising on the policy, operation and promotion of the Journal.

As an international journal, Person-Centered and Experiential Psychotherapies appears in English, but fully recognizes the major contributions of non-English-speaking countries. Thus, the Journal publishes abstracts of all articles in up to four languages, English, German, Spanish, and, if appropriate, the language of the submitter.
